In this sense it is very important for the work of DPIDG in developing public administration and management capacities. It is important in the work we have started on including the 2030 Agenda and SDGs in training public servants and the developing competences and mindsets in the public service for the SDGs.

D: Lessons learned:

For capacity development and advocacy activities it is quicker, more effective and financially economic and efficient to work with Institutions such as the APS-HRMnet. They bring together a relevant audience of Public Service Leadership and high level public officials and they appreciate the UN input in their discussions especially on the sustainable Development Goals.
